The Red Kangaroo

What Australian animal can leap eight metres in one hop and move at 56 kilometres an hour? The answer is the red kangaroo. A full grown male usually reaches the height of 1.82 metres and weighs 90 kilograms. This is slightly bigger than the grey kangaroo, making it the world's largest marsupial, which is a mammal where the mother has a pouch for carrying, feeding and protecting her young.

While a red kangaroo may be the largest marsupial, the newborn baby is around three centimetres long. After a few months in mum's stomach pouch, the young kangaroo, which is called a joey, begins to come out. However, it hurries back to the pouch fast when frightened, hungry or cold. Eventually, the joey gets so big it hangs out of the pouch. Then, at eight months old, it stays out. The joey remains close to its mother until ready to live on its own.

Red kangaroos are good swimmers. However, they are best known for their hopping abilities. Their long, powerful hind legs have big feet. Hopping moves them quickly over their grassy and desert habitats. Meanwhile, a thick tail helps them keep their balance.

The red kangaroo's vegetarian diet provides much of its water. Staying in the shade, panting and being active mostly at night time helps the red kangaroo conserve water and stay cool. In fact, these creatures are nocturnal. They spend most of the daylight hours sleeping or resting.

Red kangaroos travel together in groups called mobs which include both males and females. Males show their dominance by "boxing" with other males. They balance on their tails and try pushing each other off balance with their forearms or by kicking their hind legs. This kicking ability, can also be used by kangaroos to defend against Australia's wild dog.

On 17 January 2003, a film starring a red kangaroo was released. Kangaroo Jack is a comedy film that follows the misadventures of two friends who are forced to deliver $50,000 to Australia. While taking pictures of a red kangaroo, one of them puts his jacket on it and the kangaroo bounces off with all the money inside the jacket pocket. The two friends are forced to chase Kangaroo Jack to try and get back the money.
